TRIBUNALS HAVE BEEN APPOINTED

The names of the tribunals appointed to consider applications for exemptions, have been published and the two citizens appointed to act at Munson are T. P. Green-tree of Drumheller and T. Whyte of Munson. Mr. Whyte has received no word yet confirming his appointment but no doubt everything in connection with the tribunals will

a number of the young men in the first class are making preparations to go to Calgary to be examined
by the medical board while others are filing applications for exemption.

YOU CAN HELP

Canada and the United States
probably will be able to provide for the Allies' requirements of cereals other than wheat, during the next twelve months.

The Allied peoples themselves
have been economizing with wheat and wheat flour. As Lord Northcliffe said in Montreal, "There is no such thing as white bread in the old country, from the King's table downwards." Other cereals are being used but cannot be used alone for bread. The Allies must add them to wheat flour to make the war bread now in universal use in European countries. Except in Italy, where the people normally consume much corn, there are few corn mills in Europe. Corn meal,
not being a durable commodity,
cannot, cannot be shipped across
the ocean in great quantities.

The Allies must have a wheat
flour basis for their war effort.
Unless the people Canada and the United States are willing to substitute other cereals for part of the wheat flour which they normally consume, they will be denying even war bread to many thousands of people. Substitution of at least one pound of other cereals for one pound of wheat flour weekly, per person, would save a very large quantity of wheat for export. It would still be far short of meeting
the normal consumption requirements of the Allies but it would save the situation.

DELAY VERY ILL-ADVISED

Promptness in Response is Essential Under the Military Service Act.

Ottawa, Oct. 17th.—"Procrastination is the thief of time." This is especially true with regard to individual duties under the system
by which the Military Service Act is now being enforced.

Indeed, the provisions of the Act operated are such that procrastination may be the thief of important privileges, since a limited time only can be allowed for applications for exemption to be taken up by the Exemption Boards.

Canadians are advised to take such action as may be dictated by their circumstances as soon as possible. Reports for service or claim of exemption from military service
should be made, whenever possible,
immediately after the proclamation
issuing calling out the first class.

The machinery instituted under the Act will work much more smoothly if all those concerned come forward without delay. In this case, promptness is a patriotic duty as well as being in the highest interests of the individual concerned.

MAXIMUM IS NAMED FOR PROFIT OF
THE MILLERS

Mr. Hanna has announced that after November 1, the net profits of Canadian millers will be limited to a maximum average of 25c on the milling of sufficient wheat to make a barrel of flour of 196 lbs.
and the offals produced in connection therewith. Mills will be licensed and will be required to manufacture one or more of three standard grades of flour, which will represent a higher percentage extraction than the white flour now in general use in Canada. Cash prices for these standard grades will be set from time to time. Mr. W.
Sanford Evans will supervise the carrying out of the arrangements, co-operating with a special advisory committee of the millers.—Food Bulletin.

MILLINERY FOR THOSE IN MOURNING

Becoming Bonnet
for the Widow

SO LONG as women are at variance regarding the custom of mourning there will always be a certain number interested in the subject and on the lookout for proper and becoming apparel for the mourning period. There is no reason why the all-black or the black-and-white costume should not be as smart and well chosen as the clothing selected for gay festivities. Certainly there are plenty of models from which to choose. In the matter of millinery and neckwear the models shown are proof of this statement.

Particularly charming for the widow are the two bonnets shown. The one with the white poke brim is an exquisite example of fine handwork. The white is English crepe, and folds of this material form a trimming for the brim, which is inclined to poke just a little at the front. Over the white a long, narrow veil of black grenadine is artistically draped. Hemstitching and the broad hem give a pleasing finish to the veil. One must have remarkably good features and complexion to wear a black blouse without a touch of white somewhere. If one is not so blessed, the introduction of the tucked crepe vest will be a helpful suggestion.

Who knows but that the turban model was inspired by the Red Cross cap? At any rate, it has lines that are sure to deal kindly with the widow, be she of mentionable or unmentionable age. Folds of English crepe have been cleverly used to make the oval ornament surrounded by a heavy rope of jet beads. Circles of the head rope and dull black ribbon are used at the side. In this instance, the veil is of black crepe.

Suitable headgear for the young unmarried woman in mourning for a parent, sister or brother, is the hat with a face veil draped over it. For such purpose the veil is always bound with a broad border of black crepe. The hat follows out the fall tendency for high crowns. The manner in which the folds of crepe are braided to trim is an interesting feature.

On the other high-crowned turban a band of dull jet beads is used very effectively. A solid square of jet marks the center front. The hat itself is of black crepe de chine. Black chiffon over white Georgette fashions the dainty collar.

Quite an unusual shape is the one terminating in a point at the extreme top. The vogue for soutache braid has invaded mourning millinery, as exemplified. Gros-grain ribbon pleated encircles the jet button.

"Pushing on again, he found himself among children, in a grove in which the startles were clattering like a cascade of falling leaves. Just beyond the grove he was aware of Mr. Langton's form, erect, hunched, coming towards him. He had time to note what ravages this last storm had wrought in a face, already thin and careworn, before Mr. Langton recognized him. So absorbed was he in his own heavy thoughts that he had not but passed when they met, and he left on his hands with an effort at humorous amusement."

"My dear boy," he said, "I might have guessed that you would come. But I am so sorry that I did not. Margaret will not let you have her address."

"I did not ask that she should," a slight cloud that had been over the natural brightness of Hilary's face lifted. "I did not ask for her address. I should despair if I did. I worried her. I came to see you. We are, in a sense, in the same boat. I needed sympathy."

"Mr. Langton's hand went out and clasped Hilary's warmly."

"That is good of you dear fellow," he said. "Not that I am sure, but I am sure that you should be in the same boat as I. I could despair if I did. I could not. When Margaret's letter came to me, I was sure that she was another way doing, steadily and surely, what I could do. I thought I should. I have only one thing to say myself for that. I consented, but she took a deal of time to do so. I thought it was better to wait before she would consent to save his life. The thing ought to have been done differently, but as her time is short—"

"Don't blame yourself, sir, even remotely. You did only what you should do, what any other man would have done in your place."

"Neither spoke about the ordeal that lay ahead, from which Lady South was to be saved."

"Now you are come, are you going to stay?" Mr. Langton asked. Hilary turned with him and they met the sea wind.

"As long as you stay, sir, if I am not a trouble to you."

"I go back to London in a fortnight from now. I shall be very glad for you to stay. Where do you put up?" At the splendor of the question, Hilary's face flushed, but he answered, however much it may be misapprehended, "I have no room for me under their roof. I have already made the acquaintance of Mr. and Madame Desfour. I am to sleep in the Chateau."

"I don't like the Chateau much," he said. "It is not healthy. I should think, a depressing place. But I have no choice. My daughter here there will be no room in the Marine. Why not get a bedroom in the village?"

"I need only sleep at the Chateau. It will do me well enough. I have sent in a woman to scrub the floors of my bedroom and clean the walls of the rubbish. I hope the Desfours will not mind."

"They hardly ever go into the Chateau. I don't think they like it. They praise it, but they hate it. I want the fresh air and the view from the hill. I have sent down all that dense thicket of trees with its undergrowth."

"They were on the top of the hill now, the sand dunes stretching away below them, the great Norman tower of the church and its leaning crosses just visible and the steeple rising from the dunes, the sheep mere blobs, the red roofs of the village in relief against the background of sand and sea."

"A sister looking place at his head, said Hilary with a nod of his head towards the farm they were passing."

"Yes, with a sister, Hilary. No one from the village round will pass by. If they can help it, not even in broad daylight. The old shepherd out there takes a mile of his road rather than pass Les Peupliers. A horrid place."

"They seem a superstitious lot about here."

"All peasants are superstitious. I'm afraid I've been rather gloomy. Wait till you meet Mrs. Lloyd. She knows pretty well the whole history of this coast. She'll tell you some eerie stories; but she has no creepy personality that she does not deserve."

"As they went down the hill from the farm house, suddenly they were arrested by something like a cry in the wind that followed them. They stopped short, looked at each other, and turned about to stare at the solitary farm house. There was no recollection of the cry. The farm house lay, a dark shape against the gold and green of the sky, an image of loneliness on the wide stretch of the dunes."

"Did you hear a cry?" they asked each other.

"But thought they heard it, but now there was not a sign of life. They must have fancied it. Was the place laying its eerie spells upon them?"

"They went on again after a little pause."

"No one would be surprised to hear that he had heard strange sounds from Les Peupliers," said Hilary, as they went down the hill. "A good many people would be surprised that he had the tendency"

the way past it, especially with the twilight coming as it might be a horrid place. It might well be haunted."

The squire's manner of the hotel. Hilary was a cheerful fellow. He came into a bright fire was glowing on the hearth, and the tables were set for dinner. Monsieur bled out to meet them, full of cheer. But of course, he had to go during the day. Two Monsieur had gone to the village. The squire, who had come to the Marine, where Madame's cooking and the excellent company would have made them perfectly happy, while at the Splendid, World-famed Monsieur as he shrugged his shoulders and lifted his eyes and his hands to heaven.

Mr. Langton was not easy for Mr. Langton to pick up the first of the two names he found on the 'new' squire's luggage would have plenty of time to display to Mr. Langton his chamber a fit at the Chateau. Hilary was ready. Monsieur then made a discovery. Mr. Langton's notebook had not yet been carried over to the Chateau. He would bring it directly, with a supply of towels and some other things. Mr. Langton might. Hilary picked up a note from Monsieur, received the little lamp from his host's hands, and then he could not dream of allowing Mr. Langton to carry the things, to Hilary giving up his position with a remarkable indifference.

"I am giving up my position with a remarkable indifference. The path through the forest was not yet light. Over the head that they had to tread was a little white winged man, the squire, who had been to London to carry. It might have been a bird flying over the whole place, round the dense cover of the wood. A light flash; something scurried, with a scurry, the whole place round full of stealthy rustlings and move."

"I always think this scrap of wood is the best of the jungle. Mr. Langton, as he stumbled over a protruding root of a tree."

"I have known this place some years, though I have never slept in the Chateau du Bois. But is full of every sort of prehistoric people, with whom the whole place is nothing eerie could inhabit. Of course there is the crowd."

"You like to go to the Splendid hotel, or to a lodging in the village. Even if I find this place in the world of wood to be cut out of the forest of small birds and beasts."

"The door of the Chateau stood open. They went upstairs, passing the door of the Chateau, and saw a yawning hallway beyond. A cheerful light came from the room which Hilary was to occupy. Margot had been there and had done her work thoroughly. The floor was bare and the walls were the drab grey of the window looked above a clear blue sky, where the birds were in part looked above the trees; the fire had burned up and illuminated the room to its distant corners."

A Saner Path

U.S. and Britain Join Hands to Settle the World on a New Path

It is not democracy alone that is imperiled by Prussianism; this civilization of the world is at stake. Portions of France are today, so the world of the world may find the nations after the war can set some limit to the unscrupulous use of military power by Germany America, while preparing to wage the present struggle with her might, looks beyond it to the prospect of a happier dispensation which all countries may find security. That certainly is an inspiration that calls the full strength of British sentiment. Together the United States and the British Empire can a long way towards realizing it, and the best outcome of their present close association ought to be, and will be, not merely the achievement of victory, but the hope of setting the world on a new and saner path—London Daily Mail.

Maid of Orleans Anointed More appreciable! This time the German victim is Joan of Arc. Yes, the Germans are actually claiming the patron saint of France as a fellow-countryman. They have acquired large quantities of statues and images of the maid in the French towns which they will occupy. In one case, at least, they ordered a manufacturer to make duplicates of his casts. The Frenchman was appalled, and he had the reason of his devotion. "Oh," was the reply, "Joan of Arc is not French, since she was a Lorraine, and Lorraine is German. Certainly she prayed to heaven for the success of our arms, for they are directed against her mortal enemies; the French who delivered her up, and the English who burned her!"—London Chronicle.

What are you raising in your war garden? With my wife's pet dog, the mischief-makers and crooked-necked cats. I'm raising Cain. What else do you suppose a war garden is for?—Baltimore American.

Gerie—You ought to get something out of that rook, Bertie. Bertie—Well, how much will you give me?

First in the Field

Woman Warrior of Russia Set a Fine Example

The women warriors of the Battalion of Death are by no means the first Russian women who have joined the ranks of the combatants. Though at the beginning of the war the Russian military regulations forbade their enlistment, the rules were often honored in the breach. The pioneer of Apollonia Isoltsev, who was accepted as a volunteer in a regiment commanded by her father, and was awarded the Cross of St. George of the third class for discovering a telephone which the enemy had hidden in a loft, and was using for the purpose of its intelligence department. That a workman had served in the field was discovered in the course of her defense to a suit brought against her for failure to pay the hire of her sewing machine. Asked what she had to say for herself, she replied: "Nothing, except that I am unable to pay, as I was wounded a short time ago fighting against the Austrians." The judge examined her papers, and found them in order; and the prosecutor was so moved by her story that he withdrew his summons.—Westminster Gazette.

A Serious Case

An Irishman employed in a large factory had taken a day off without permission and secured likely to lose his job in consequence. When asked by his foreman the next day why he had not turned up the day before, he replied:

"I was so ill, sir, that I could not come to work to save my life."

"How was that, then, Pat? Did you pass the factory on your bicycle the morning?" asked the foreman.

Pat was slightly taken aback, then, recovering his presence of mind, he replied:

"Sure, sir, that must have been when I was going for the doctor."

Dairy Conditions

Milk and Butter Supplies Decreasing While Population Is Increasing

The United States food administration has issued the following statement on dairy conditions:

Milk and butter supplies are decreasing in the United States, while our population is increasing. The dairy herds of Europe are diminishing rapidly because of the conditions created by war, and there is no probability of improvement in these conditions. The dairy problem in this country, therefore, is not only a war emergency problem, but one that will continue after war.

The world's dairy supplies are decreasing rapidly for two important reasons. First, the dairy cattle of Europe are diminishing, for Europe is being driven to eat its cattle for meat; second, the diversion of labor to war has decreased the older supplies, and the shortage of shipping has limited the amount of imported butter, and therefore the cattle which can be supported and the productivity of the individual cow have been reduced. Even our own dairy supplies are not keeping pace with our growth of population, for our per capita milk supply has fallen from 20.2 gallons annually in the past fifteen years. Yet today we must meet increasing demands of dairy products to our allies.

Since the outbreak of the war, the normal times came to a considerable degree from western Scandinavia, Holland and Switzerland, but under German pressure these supplies are now partly diverted to Germany. The men under arms and the wounded are being supplied with milk and butter in large quantities. The net result has been a decrease in the dangerous reduction of consumption among the adults of the civil population in Europe, and our allies are short of large quantities and upon the basis of the reduction of this shortage must fall on North America.

The high price of fodder and meat in the United States during the past few years, induced by the pressing European demand, has set up dangerous currents in this country, and the dairy herds of those regions are upon butter and the sale of milk to municipalities, having made it more profitable to sell the cattle for meat than to keep them and produce dairy products. Therefore, the dairy cattle are decreasing in those sections. The only sections in which dairy products have had a rise in price in appropriate proportion to the increase in cost of feeds are those producing condensed milk and cheese.

Our home milk and butter supplies are therefore decreasing while our population is increasing. This deficiency of dairy butter is shown by the sales of margarine, which show an increase of several million pounds per month over similar periods in 1915. Dairy butter, however, has qualities which render it vitally necessary for table use. Milk has no substitutes, and should be not only intrinsically one of our cheapest and most food, but is absolutely fundamental to the rearing of the children.

The dairy situation resolves itself into several phases. First, it is to be hoped that the abundant harvest will result in lower prices of feed, and diminish the impetus to sell the cattle for meat. Then he repeats his experience and the actual profits which he has made from his short-term activities during the past twenty years would buy several barrels with money to spare, says the Gazette.

The very fact that the young man had spent enough to take Col. Woods' word indicated a striking quality, and one which was much to do with his success. We scarcely imagine that "just any farmer could duplicate the affair any more than just any merchant could become a merchant prince. There are great essentials. A vision, and nerve to put it across. Ambition and determination play as large a part in forming a man of great worth of life."

Brazil has, for the period of the war, abolished all private wireless stations and plants.

BRITISH SACRIFICES HAVE PRODUCED RESULTS

Kennedy Jones, late Director of food economy, under whom the voluntary campaign was organized, reports in a message to the Food Controller, that in four months, the consumption of bread was cut down 20 per cent. and of wheat by 33 1/2 per cent. And despite the shortage of potatoes and other bread substitutes of which there will be plenty in Canada this Fall and Winter.

"Eat less bread" was the slogan in Britain and loyally have the British people done their part.
